

Episode 7: Can Anything Good Come from D.C.?

Discussion Guide:

- Consider the statistic Trevin shared at the beginning of the episode: “Americans are more likely to be unhappy if their kids marry someone from a different political party than if they marry someone outside their religion.” What do you think this signifies? How would you respond to your child marrying someone with different political beliefs, but who was a Christ follower?
- What do you think is an appropriate way for a church to be involved in politics? How should individual Christians be engaged in politics?
- Have you seen churches and Christians in your community put their politics above Christianity? How does this approach affect their witness within the community?
- How does political involvement of the church in America affect our Christian witness in other parts of the world?
- What are three ways you can promote unity within the church between believers with different political views?
